Music can boost your child’s language skills

Most young children love to sing. That’s good news because singing is an effective way to strengthen communication skills.

Here are some fun music activities to enjoy with your child:

- Learn as many nursery rhymes as you can. Have your child help you find some at the library. Teach them to her and sing them together as often as possible. Try to sing at least one a day. Combining nursery rhymes with an activity, such as Ring Around the Rosie, encourages active play and builds muscles, too.
- Experiment with different types of singing, such as singing in a round. (This is when each person sings the same melody, but starts at a different time.) Songs that work well for this include Row, Row, Row Your Boat and Are You Sleeping?
- Introduce your child to your favorite music. (Make sure the lyrics are age-appropriate.) Your child will enjoy sharing music with you as she learns to sing along with parts of the song.
